The Counties that increased in population are shaded and the percentage of increase is given in the small circles.

The Counties that decreased in population are not shaded and the percentage of decrease is given in the small diamonds.

The eight Counties in the southeast corner indicated by heavy dotted lines embrace the swamp and overflowed lands where drainage has been going on for the past five years, and with the exception of St. Louis County and Jackson County where Kansas City is located, these eight Counties have made the greatest increases in population.

The black lines indicate the Frisco Railroad Lines and it will be noted that the districts increasing in population are almost all traversed by that railroad, and this fact is very marked in the eight southeastern Counties which are covered by a net work of Frisco rails.
